To the Editor of The Evening World:

Now that there is such stir and excitement over the return of Brookly's famous preacher, I humbly announce that I am prepared to write or preach, extempore, as good a sermon as any of his.

I am a poor, friendless, obscure farm laborer, earning in Summer and harvest laborer, earning in Summer and harvest $1,35 per day and in Winter from $1 to $3 per week. Per week.

Deer Park, L. L. On receipt of the above letter, Mr.

Salmon was communicated with and in response to THE EVENING WORLD'S request, he has submitted the following autobiography of himself and his career, which shows that the reverend gentleman as had a varied and eventful existence. I was born in the city of Edinburgh. Scotland, Jan. 19, 1847. As a boy I was full of poetic fancies, ss ambittous as Julius Cuesar, and as imaginative as an 'Arabian Night's "tale.

Casear, and as imaginative as an "Arabian Night's "tale,
I would neither study nor set myself to any business. Heing anxious to see foreign lands, at the age of twenty I eslibited in an English infantry regiment, going to the East Indies, and before many months was reveiling in the foll delights of rouned palaces and hindoo temples in the classic city of Lucknow.

There is little of poetry or romance in a soldier's life, in the time of peace at least, so I soon got cured of a great many of my boy'sh notions and did what I could to make up for lost time by reading as much as I could.

ap for lost time by reading as much as I could.

Having plenty of time and access to a good library, and having naturally a good memory. I soon acquired a great deal of information which subcred me down. I was eight years in India and when at the expiration of my period of enlistment in March, 1880. I found myself once more in the city of my birth, instead of applying to any of my friends for assistance. I resolved to take the first chance of work I could get and be independent, as my friends, with true Scotch pride, thought I had lowered myself by enlisting.

I at one got a position as conductor on the horse-cars in Edinburgh, and after ten months was made Inspector.

In 1883 Heft the city to engage in private missionary work, the expenses being paid by a wealthy lady, a member of the same church as myself. I was nearly two rears at this then left to take a preaching engagement as a public evangelist.

I had more visiting than preaching while with the lady, and she thought I ought to come out publicly.

Six months afterwards I saw a very flatering advertisement in a daily paper for an exangelist in connection with Mr. Baxter's Gospel Union.

Haywood is the man who claims to have seen Birchell and Benwell go through his gristmill yard on the Governor's road on that fatal day, the 17th, in February, and to have seen Birchell come back later alone, with his trousers rolled up and bloodstains on his clothes.

Brakeman Hay repeated at the inquest the story he had told at the examination in Clifton, about Birchell wating for the train at Eastwood Feb. 17, and his testimony was practically corroborated by Miss Al'co Smith, who saw and talked with, at Eastwood that same day, the man whom she had known either as Somerset or Dudley at Woodstock, when Birchell was conducting his brilliant social campaign there as the son of sn earl.

The man wbo brings Birchell and Benwell nearest to the actual scene of the tragedy is John Crosby, a farmer, who, while walking from Princeton to East Oxford, Feb. 17, met two strangers walking the class of the contract of the contrac is 80 feet high from the sidewals. It has three stories, besides the entresol and mezranine. The style of the exterior is of the Italian lienaissance.

The perfection of club1 architecture is found in this building. The most straing features are the ballroom, extending the entire depth of the building on Sixty-third street, and 65 feet wide: the foyer, 15 feet
